

For years I have received calls from telemarketers who do not take "no" for an answer. When you ask an individual not to call you any more and that individual continues to call you against your wishes it is considered harrasment. When companies do it its considered business. The "do not call" list has taken away the aggrevation of unwanted calls. If people make the concious decision of being in the list, then companies should respect that choice. It is our right to privacy.
